INQUIRY ABOUT FENCES.

Peculiar Features of the Law Upon the Subject-The Bane of Legislation man must keep his stock on his own land, or pay damages? Has a man the right to pasture his stock on a road or public highway? B. Sacramento, April 26, 1885.

Reply.—There is very little of general law-law of general application-existing in this State upon the subject of fences. Most of the counties have special statutes upon the subject. This kind of special egislation was formerly carried to a ridicuous extent in California, so much so that it may almost be said that every farmer has a statute of his own as to fences and tres passing animals. This is well illustrated by the law covering Sacramento county, as mended in 1863, and which reads as fol

If any horse, mule, jack, jennet, hog, sheep, goat, or any head of neat cattle, shall trespass upon any cultivated field during the sowing, planting, growing or harvesting season, and until the crop or crops are removed, or shall trespass upon any garden or orchard, whether such cultivated field, garden or orchard is or is not inclosed by a layering free, the ways or or not inclosed by a lawful fence, the own owners of any such horse, etc., shall be li-for all damages sustained by reason of trespass, the same as if such cultivated garden or orchard were inclosed by a lawf fence; provided, that this Act shall only apply that portion of Sacramento county lying sou of the American river, on the east bank of the Sacramento river, and extending from the Sa ramento river to the lower Stockton road: an provided, further, that this Act shail not apply that portion of Sacramento county lying sou Here it will be seen are different rules

These quotations show but a por tion of the patches into which this county is subdivided in its fence laws, and At Pariaso, yesterday afternoon, a riot no doubt many a man's farm has four or five different laws applying to his posses-tolombians. Special Meeting. The Board of City Trustees held a specia meeting at 10 A. M. yesterday, at which all the members were present. The invitation received from the Floral Festival Committee was read, accepted, and after some discussion as to the proper plan to pursue, the whole matter was referred to a committee of three, composed of Mayor Brown, City Auditor McKee and City Attorney Anderson. The subject of sewerage for the eastern portion of the city was then taken up and discussed at length. The Trustees author

The railroad company have agreed to loan other machinery, and the same will be operated at the Columbus brewery, Sixteenth and K streets. This, it is claimed, will drain the sewage from the vicinity of the Protestant Orphan Asylum, and, if it works well, may be adopted in other portions of the city The cost of the experiment will be in the neighborhood of $700 or $800.

Parties interested in one of the clear water schemes were present, and asked what was the best figure the city would give for a pure, clear supply of mountain water. The answer of the Board was
